“ Meredith lived an active life, full of adventure and exploration. She challenged others and herself. She lived by her own rules. She suffered often, and often she suffered because she suffered. Her family often endured her suffering, as did her friends and family. Some may say she suffered needlessly, others may say she suffered on her own, because she chose to. Who can say?

A young life ended needlessly is a tragic waste, to society, and the family. Such a sad waste.

“ Meredith was inarguably one of the most forgiving, understanding, magnanimous, candid, and loving human beings ever to grace my way.
She was my friend for over a decade.
I am forever indebted to her.
My heart is broken.
My love, admiration, and respect then, now, and always.
