“ I, like many others, met Andy through the internet (in particular, Final Fantasy XIV).

I was immediately struck by his candid, but kind, demeanor. His intellect always made discussions an absolute pleasure. I appreciated his insights on a variety of topics, and throughout the years I could see impact he had on others.

I can't speak to much about his life and relationships outside of his online persona, but I want to emphasize that I feel incredibly privileged to have known him. I have a handful of recordings of our adventures online and I rewatched them after hearing the news. It hit me hard.

His family should be proud to have raised him, and I'm absolutely gutted that we lost him so suddenly. I will be making a donation in his name in lieu of flowers.

“ Andy was a valued friend of mine, both on and off-line. He always had a kind word and a steady attitude and was always ready and willing to lend a helping hand. I'll especially miss chatting about books with him. He made the world a better place and I miss him dearly.

“ It's been a few years since I had logged on to the game we both enjoyed, but his kindness and patience with me and others stands out even several years later. He was a good dude, I could tell, just from voice chat. Made me laugh a lot, too.

“ Andy was a kind and valued friend. We played Final Fantasy XIV together for several years, and achieved some great accomplishments together. Though we never actually met face-to-face, he still made an impact on my life, very much for the better. I will sincerely miss him.
