“ I would like to bid a great farewell to a coworker who became a friend. To all the hours passed playing cribbage, telling tales of life’s insights or adventures. It was always in an attempt to hear Bruce’s infectious laughter. His great love of life will always be a part of me. And of course his ability to elaborate on the exorbitant details of any given story he had to tell. Some of the details got ever more extravagant with every telling of the story until some stories entered into legendary status. Bruce took great joy in brightening another person’s day. Sometimes that was not so easy to do but he never stopped trying. Bruce was a proud veteran, never ashamed to admit that he served his country. Rest easy my friend, we have the watch now. Fair winds and following seas for the rest of your days or until your next adventure presents itself.

“ Sorry to hear of the passing of a good man, friend, and co-worker. You say he was a legendary storyteller. You don't know the half of it. I worked with Bruce for many years. Every day coming to work for him was an adventure or just reading the newspaper brought back a memory that sparked a story. He had his "special gas" and other legendary stories that we will always remember but there were so MANY more that were just day to day life. Bruce had a unique way of looking at life.....and I will miss that. Rest in Peace my friend.

“ Bruce and I met when he came home from the hospital a few days after he was born. I lived across the alley from Bruce until he joined the Navy and I moved out of my parents house. We spent most of our childhood days together. We shared the majority of our life events from cribs as baby's to birthday greetings when we became older than dirt. Bruce was truly a great friend that I will continue to talk to and know exactly how he would respond. Rest well my friend you have earned it.
