David was born in Marshall, Minnesota. He later attended University of Minnesota for his undergraduate degree and Iowa State University for his graduate degree in Landscape Architecture. Most of his career, he owned and operated a landscape architecture and design business that later included golf course design. Once retired, he worked as a starter at Bearpath Golf & Country Club and in the garden department at Menards, both in Eden Prairie, Minnesota. He deeply treasured his colleagues and the numerous friendships that he fostered over the span of his life.

David had a passion for the outdoors not only professionally, but personally. He was an avid fisherman and hunter, often traveling with friends and family. The constants in David's life were his love for his three sons and the game of golf. Whether playing weekly at Meadowbrook Golf Course, chatting with members of Bearpath at the first tee, or playing with his three sons, he loved the game of golf.
