“ I had an unfortunate tendency of running an extremely high fever as a child when I caught the flu. I'm talking 104-105 temperature with hallucinations to boot. Somewhere in the middle of the madness a cool sensation would slowly, peacefully bring me back to reality. As my vision became clear again, I would see my mother sitting next to me holding a cold washcloth against my forehead while running her fingertips through my hair. Her blue eyes soothing the soul of a frightened young boy. She was there for me, all night, every time, without question. She was the kindest, most genuine, nurturing, loving single person I have ever known. I was lucky to have even known her at all...
even luckier to have been her baby
