Edward was a leader in his chosen field and earned the Professional Engineer (PE) designation. He began his career as a lieutenant in the United States Army Corps of Engineers and was an honorably discharged veteran of foreign wars, having served during the Korean Conflict. Over his 50+ year career, Edward became highly regarded by industry experts as a trailblazer in Critical Path Management (CPM) and was one of the first civil engineers in the country to computerize this method of managing highly complex construction projects. In addition to English, Edward spoke fluent Spanish and conversational German. Throughout his life, Edward showed a strong commitment to his loved ones. He was a devoted husband, a loving father, and a doting grandfather. His family meant the world to him he made it a priority to create lasting memories and provide unwavering support. He was an avid cross country and downhill skier and competed in NASTAR ski races well into his 70s. He also enjoyed gardening in his backyard garden and working on construction projects around the home.
