A true renaissance man, Jim had an insatiable curiosity, was a voracious reader with vocabulary to match; loved literature, film, art, and poetry. He shared his passion for an uncommonly broad range of music, of which he had a deep knowledge, and collected a small museum's worth of instruments. Travel was a big part of Jim's life, working on the Empire Builder train as a teen, selling for Braniff and SAS, running Wallace Travel, and traveling the world for work and leisure. He loved canoeing, sailing, and scuba diving. A talented photographer, Jim chronicled our lives with stunning shots filling countless albums and drives, with cherished enlargements in friends' homes. Intrigued by genealogy, he created a digital family history, and recently, a memoir. An eloquent writer, communicator, and visionary manager, Jim did groundbreaking branding and advertising work for BBDO, Siegel+Gale, and Cargill. An advocate for equity, Jim would address ethical disparities head-on and form lasting bonds with friends and colleagues. He had a wit and style like no other.
