“ Sometimes you meet someone and you instantly like that person, in spite of any differences or distance. Jeanne was one of those people. I met her in 2013 when my parents visited her and husband when we were in the Cities. She was so warm and friendly and had such a spirit to her. I am not a hugger, but I got hugs from both her and her husband, Burt. I didn't see her again until this past Christmas when I was in Texas. She made sure I knew I needed to stop in and visit before I went home. She'd had a stroke a few months before, and so she was weak, but she did not sit still. She gave me a tour of their house, and was still just as vibrant as ever. On Sunday, my mom sent me a message that they had found some brain tumors not long before, and that she had passed away this day.

Even though she was nearly 40 years older than me and I only saw her a handful of times, Jeanne touched me. And I'll miss her.
