Obituary for Jerry Cooper

Jerry was born on a warm day in Arkansas on September fourth, 1948. From some of the stories Jerry told about his childhood, it sounds like he was just as stubborn back then as he was now. Jerry is survived by his sons Gary Todd (Tabatha), Adrien Cooper and grandchildren Malcolm and Tiffany plus many friends.

Jerry loved three things above all others, women, women and women. I personally witnessed him proposing to no less than 6 women, the final one was in the hospital only a few weeks ago. Jerry had a firm belief that everyone should have a flask, a knife and a firearm within reach that you knew how to use well. To that end, he was always trying to talk people into going to the gun range to shoot and if they did, he would later follow up with a gift of either a flask or knife or both.

Jerry was a man of character who would consider you a good friend if you had his back and weren't afraid to apologize when you were wrong because that is how he behaved as well. Jerry was the type of guy who lived by a strong moral code but could also have a good time. Jerry was also a good person to work with because he was so easy to get along with. He was often the butt of many practical jokes, but he never got upset with his younger peers while removing screws from his keyboard or cutting the zip ties that bound a My Little Pony backpack to his office chair.

Jerry's other great love was the great outdoors. He relished getting outside to enjoy nature and maybe doing a little hunting or target practice. Above all else though, Jerry loved to fish. His greatest desire, especially these last couple of months, was to get out and go fishing with his favorite fishing buddy, Sandy.
