“ It is not death or dying that is tragic, but rather to have existed without fully participating in life. That is the deepest personal tragedy. Edward Abbey And this man fully participated in all that life had to offer. Love by many, Aunt Sandy & family

“ You left stage all too soon, dear sir. We traveled in different circles, but when our paths crossed, it was always a gift. There was a quiet passion to your music that always spoke to me. Your easy manner and ready smile brightened many a room. You generously shared that rich creativity of yours, lifting up anything from an impromptu circle to a party for thousands. There are a hundred places you'll be missed, a hundred places you'll remain in our hearts, but thanks to you we'll be smiling as we remember. Thank you, Michael

“ I was lucky enough to have Michael in two of the classes I teach at Hamline. I always appreciated his gracious smile, wit, and kindness. Since hearing of his passing I've read much of his blog through tears. Yet I also keep finding myself smiling in recognition of the big hearted person that I knew from class. My thoughts and prayers are with his friends and family. May his amazing spirit give you strength.

“Mike; we are missing you, I have been trying to sum up your life, and all I can do is say what you were to me. Great friend, artistic in music, art, and the printer word, outgoing, had a sense of wonder lust for all things, and a teacher. I wish you had more time so that you could affect more people with your zest for life and to continue to challenge those around you to do more and try and be greater than they were yesterday. The time that we have shared I will remember with all my heart, for your affect on my life is incalculable, I know that it is richer for it. With your passing it is quieter, smaller, and vastly less colorful. May go in god's graces and may peace be with you all, for we are lesser people for your passing, and you have left a legacy in all that you have touched.
