“As a self-described, Type A perfectionist, my mom instilled a “yes you can” attitude in all of her children, where the bar was always set a little bit higher.

She was skilled in thinking outside of the box, to foster an environment for continued growth and development for her family and infuse a sense of confidence in each of us to try new things. Challenge your body and challenge your mind...” you can do more than you think you can” was a common theme in our home.

She was wicked smart, with an award-winning creative talent and a Martha Stewart flare. She opened so many doors for her family and loved ones, by inspiring creative thought and taking action.

I do not recall a time, as a child where I was bored. As a family, my mom worked hard to pave a path for us to explore new activities and visit new places. Sporting activities, art, music, singing and dance were actively encouraged, allowing for us as kids to explore what we were most passionate about, find and follow our unique talents, to pursue and live well rounded lives.

She was an inspirational role model for all of us to work hard, play hard, and most importantly to love one another with kindness and compassion.
