“ Richard and AL always bought things together. They shared everything. Richard was a great sharer. When they made the dune buggy, he wanted to give everyone a ride. When they got the boat, he took everyone skiing. He loved to see people smiling and enjoying the things he had.

“ The maker, the inventor, and the inquisitor: uncle Richard. For all of the family gatherings we had over the years Richard had a project he wanted to show my brother and I and was very intent on describing the details around the project; how it worked, what it did, and why he was doing it. The belief and conviction in an idea runs strong within the Pierce family and that is one of the best sources of Richard's influence on my life. One way or another, he would get me thinking and challenge my answers. Even in my last visit with Richard he provided the same point of view for me to consider. I can't believe you are gone so soon uncle Richard, we love you and miss you—rest in peace!
